Midstream Report 2022 by Former White House Spokesman Bob Weiner and Team

WASHINGTON, May 11, 2022 /PRNewswire/ -- Former White House spokesman Robert Weiner and his team have produced several recent op-eds that they would like to share broadly. The first is by Weiner and policy analyst Adjanni Ramos, published in the Salt Lake Tribune, on how the International Olympic Committee must answer questions including why the Olympics didn't allow parents to attend and support their children's events in Beijing, given the Olympics are for the "education of youth" and teen mental health often requires parents' support as Simone Biles and Shaun White both said. The article also questions why the Games did not ban Russian athletes with the evidence of state-sponsored doping even before the Ukraine invasion, and allowed drugged skater Kamila Valieva to compete. The second, by Weiner and senior policy analyst Ben Lasky in OpEdNews (ranked H1 as the #1 op-ed in the nation) is about how the Jan. 6 Committee and Georgia prosecutor must go bold, public, soon and includes the authors' question and answer with Speaker Pelosi agreeing and asserting the country must get "the truth." Their third, in the Miami Herald, the country's leading aging population center paper, is about how the House should reinstate the House Aging Committee. Last, they wrote a piece featured in OpEdNews about how it's time for a Berlin-like food and medicine airlift and supply route in Ukraine. All 2022 op-eds and radio-TV interviews—in particular London Times Radio and Main Street Radio Network-- are below as well.
